About

Holly Lane—Not Enough Time to Love the World showcases a range of Lane’s work garnered from the previous ten-plus years of a multi-decade career. As an art undergraduate, she began considering the relationship of frame to picture. She has since reimagined it into a new art form of her own invention, in which each component—painting and frame—is fundamental to the work as a whole. In a striking symbiosis, she unites each of her paintings with an intricately ornamented wood frame that she designs and carves for it.

SF/Arts Curator Insight

A detailed painting of a pond's mossy green surface disturbed by rising air bubbles is encased in an intricately carved cherry wood frame that resembles a cuckoo clock. A similar sculpture's "face" features wispy white clouds in an impossibly blue sky. Art Nouveau-inspired trees, vines, and fruit carvings frame lush images of the natural world (birds, elk, nighttime forests) that populate this heartfelt Holly Lane retrospective.
